DES MOINES – Brenna Bird has shattered historical fundraising numbers for an incumbent Iowa Attorney General. Today, her campaign announced it raised more than $2,000,000 during 2025 and enters the 2026 election year with nearly $2,200,000 cash on hand. Bird's predecessor entered his last re-election campaign with \$147,440 before being defeated by Bird in 2022.

"So many passionate supporters have invested in my campaign because they know the importance of our work," Brenna Bird said. "Whether it's taking on scammers, fighting for victims, protecting children, supporting law enforcement, or defending constitutional rights, the work we do in the Attorney General's office makes an incredible impact on the lives of every Iowan."

"We've done great work restoring services for victims, backing the blue, and helping families get answers through our cold case unit, and we're just getting started. Now is not the time to go backwards and hand this office over to a radical progressive who would undo all of our work," Bird continued. "I'm grateful to serve as Iowa's Attorney General. Between now and November, I'll be working to share our record of success and once again earn the support of my fellow Iowans."
